CHILDREN.

The following beautiful lines, which we copy from The Opal" for 1845, are true to nature's holice

Sweet things! blest things! to look on you, Eyes that are in their wane Grow bright—and hearts at ebb of age Fill with life's tides again.

And you not age, nor death should touch, If human love might save; But stronger is the love which blights

And gathers to the grave. We know that you the angels love-(They love all gentle things.)

And often o'er you fondly stoop, And spread their viewless wings. And tenderly their starry eyes Watch you by night and day, And sweetly as they smile on you,

So you, on us, alway, And oh I should He who smiles on all, And loves both young and old-Should the dear Shepherd take his lambs,

And bear them to his fold-Should He who gave these buds of love, Who gives and maketh lorn— Leave us like withered stems till eve,

And take them in the morn: We still, oh! God, would trust His love Who once, in form like them, Slept on a woman's yearning breast,

A babe in Bethlehem ; Who writes, in flowers, upon the earth, And stars, in leaven above, And smiles and tears in human scals,

Who Hope hath given to Death-as dawn To thickest dark he gave;

And caused that s ill the new year's flowers Grow on the old year's grave; Who joy can being from grief, as calm Succeeds the wind's fierce wars-As winter's tear-being summer leaves,

And night the joy of stars! Who from these children's steps, the thorns Of grief, and doubt, and care, Can kindly take - or for their peace As kindly plant them there:

Thro' regions sad with weeping storms, Dark wood and frowning hill, Or valley bright as angel's dreams Can guide them at his will.

And lead them on in peace, with joy And singing on their way ; Till at the last, their shining path

Is lost in perfect day. WINTER.

You're welcome, Old Winter!" the tich man cries, With a besom of provid content, As round his empeted halls his eyes With a meaning plante are sent; For the fires been brooks and the ensements tall

Are contained with drappely rare-The winds may how! and the nows may fall, "You're welcome, Old Winter!" the gay lad cries,

Old Winter may bluster and rave and storm.

The plea of the poor and old .

The Widow exclaims, and clasps The shivering Orphans around her knee, In a wild and phreezied grasp :

A laughing crowd she sees, And merrity gingle the sleigh-fells gay,

And making their lives less drear!

House of Knox, THE REFORMER .- In the narrow street called the Netherbow, Elinburgh, stands the haise of the reformer, Knox. In this house he lived for years, in it he died, and out of that little balcony, he is said often to have addressed the assembled people. A small stone effigy of Knox is still to be seen at the corner of the wall, and near it are cut the words, * Dens Edinburgh magistrates have not enough author-ity to chase gin-drinkers and their profauations from the house once sanctified by the life and death of a great reformer, they ought at least to remove from its walls the old effigy and inscription, which form so repreachful a contrast to its use and condition. - Kohl's Scotland.

A CHARITABLE RUSE. King Robert of Cicily, brother of Pope
Urban and of the Emperor Valemond, was a Prince of great valor and renown, but of a temper so proud and impatient, that he did not like to bend his knee to Heaven itself, but would sit twirling his beard, and looked so well.

The court, at the word 'hideous,' roared against the unhappy wretch, and he was londed with every kind of scorn and huse. Indeed with every kind of scorn and abuse. Indeed with every kind of Putnam gave up the team, and sauntered upon to preach a charity sermon be made rence round about him, during the gravest as if a palsy had struck him.
